Dear Client and Colleague:

Enclosed is our December issue of our CPA Bulletin. I am writing this letter just before Thanksgiving, and I am reminded that we have much to be thankful for. Yesterday we had our monthly firm partner meeting and all eight partners were present. We had a very productive meeting, but what struck me most was the fellowship and jovial interaction that occurred. I reflected that this can't be taken for granted. We have a great group of partners, and for that I am very thankful.

We also have a great group of bright, positive employees who get along with one another quite well. They have made the Firm a "Top Workplace Company" two years in a row (and perhaps three!). This tells me they are happy to be with the Firm. The two outstanding interns we had last busy season will be joining us full time in January. We have recently hired another outstanding young person, Andrea Barnett, who will join us in the fall of 2011. There is great chemistry in our team. We have a great staff, and for that I am very thankful.

We also have a wonderful base of loyal clients that we find very enjoyable to work with. They are also great supporters of our firm, and for the relationships, I am very thankful.

Anita Sherman, was recently named by the Indianapolis Business Journal as one of the 2010 Women of Influence honorees. She and I were also recognized in October 2010 by Indianapolis Monthly as Five Star Wealth Managers. The Firm is quite fortunate to have such a talented base of leaders to tap for this important position, and for that, I am very thankful. As a firm, we have had a great year in these very trying times, and I believe it is mostly due to each of the groups mentioned above. We have a lot to be thankful for, and I would imagine, as you reflect on it, you do too!

Our fifth Tax Seminar is on December 7 at 8:30am and deals with a topic covered in this newsletter – the return of Estate Planning. You should not miss this. If you haven't registered please call Suzanne Haskamp at 240-4476 to do so.

Very truly yours,

GREENWALT CPAs., INC.

What Financial Reform Means to You

In July 2010, President Obama signed the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act into law. Although the law will mainly affect financial institutions, it also will have an impact on consumers, investors, and borrowers.

In general, the main purpose of the law is to reduce risk in the U.S. financial system. New regulatory agencies will be created, and others will be merged or eliminated. Ideally, this revised regulatory structure will help the U.S. economy avoid future financial crises such as that of 2008, which continues to cause turmoil for both the U.S. and global economies.

In addition, the creators of this legislation wanted to prevent the abuse of consumers by financial services companies. Therefore, several provisions of the new law are designed to provide consumer protection.

Powerful protector

Among other things, the law calls for the creation of a Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, which is scheduled to begin operating sometime in 2011. It will regulate banks, credit unions, mortgage brokers and servicers, foreclosure relief services, credit card issuers, and similar types of businesses. (Not all companies will be covered: auto dealers, for example, generally will be exempt from the Bureau's oversight.)

The new bureau will have broad powers. It will be able to write and enforce rules for financial services firms, covering areas such as deceptive lending practices. The bureau also will monitor and report on financial services, such as payday loans and check cashing shops, with the intent to minimize abuses. The new law specifically requires the bureau to conduct a study on reverse mortgages; other possibly controversial topics also are likely to come under scrutiny.

For some types of financial products and services, the drafters of the new law were not willing to wait for the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau to act. For example, the Dodd-Frank Act requires that all consumers who are denied credit or a loan, or have been charged a higher interest rate based on their credit record, are entitled to a free copy of their credit score in addition to a free credit report.

Trusted Advice

Federal Deposit Insurance

- ▶ The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) insures deposits up to $250,000 per depositor per bank. If that amount is insufficient, you can spread your accounts among multiple banks for more coverage.
- ▶ Another option is to add joint accounts at the same bank. If Jason and Jill Jones each have $250,000 individual deposits at their local bank, they can open an additional $500,000 joint account there and get full FDIC coverage.
- ▶ In addition, Jason and Jill can each have an IRA at the same bank, with FDIC coverage up to $250,000 apiece.
- ▶ Besides all of these accounts, you also can get FDIC coverage for "trust accounts," which are payable on death to specific beneficiaries. If Jason opens up a trust account with two children as beneficiaries, FDIC insurance for that account would go up to $500,000.

Specific provisions

Other provisions of the Dodd–Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act include the following:

- ❖ Funding for the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development to manage a $1 billion Emergency Homeowners Loan Program is provided. Borrowers who are at risk of foreclosure can receive up to 24 months of financial assistance. To implement the program, state and nonprofit agencies will offer 0% interest loans of up to $50,000. Loans will be made to borrowers who have had a substantial reduction in income because of job loss, income loss, or health problems. Borrowers must have had a good credit record prior to the income loss and be able to show a reasonable likelihood of resuming debt repayment within two years.
- ❖ Federal deposit insurance has been increased to $250,000 per depositor per bank for the foreseeable future. The previous ceiling of $100,000 was increased during the financial crisis. Under prior law, the $100,000 limit was scheduled to return in 2014. Now the $250,000 cap is "permanent," at least until a new act of Congress sets another limit.

- ❖ Many managers of hedge funds and private equity funds will be required to register with the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), which hasn't previously been the case. They will have to disclose information to the SEC about their investment positions and the amount of leverage involved. Investors who participate in such funds may benefit from the increased information and greater fraud protection.
- ❖ The new law authorizes the SEC to conduct a six month study on the impact of changing the current suitability standard for broker-dealers to a fiduciary duty. For further details on what this could mean for investors, see the article "New Law May Help Set Standards" in this issue. ■

Did You Know?

From January to July 2010, $515.6 billion flowed out of money market funds, primarily because of low yields. Some of that money may have moved to higher yielding bond funds, which attracted a net new cash flow of $185.6 billion in that period.

New Law May Help Set Standards

As part of the Dodd–Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act, the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) is charged with looking into the responsibilities that certain financial firms have to their clients. Now, broker-dealers must observe a suitability standard. The SEC will look into whether a fiduciary duty is more appropriate.

Defining the terms

The term broker-dealers generally refers to a financial firm that engages in securities trades on behalf of clients and also for its own account. Securities brokerage firms (including the major Wall Street firms) and insurance companies are often broker-dealers. Firms that develop and sell consumers their own investment products, such as mutual funds, are broker-dealers.

Representatives of broker-dealers, including stock brokers and insurance agents, must meet a suitability standard when offering investment advice to clients. This means that the representatives must recommend investments that are suitable for a client, based upon the client's stated goals and individual circumstances. By this standard, for example, a representative probably should not sell an aggressive growth stock mutual fund to an elderly widow who states that she wants capital preservation and steady investment income.

By comparison, registered investment advisory (RIA) firms and their representatives have a fiduciary duty to do what is best for each client. Some smaller, independent firms are RIAs. With a fiduciary duty, an investment advisor must put the client's interest first, rather than the interests of the advisor or his firm. The advisor must provide full disclosure on subjects such as investment risk and advisor's fees; he must reveal any possible conflicts of interest, such as recommending an investment from which the advisor stands to profit.

Impact on investors

The SEC study required by the new law may result in a recommendation that the fiduciary duty replace the suitability standard, at least in some areas of the financial industry. If that causes broker-dealer representatives to provide more personalized recommendations, with greater disclosure and fewer conflicts of interest, so much the better.

Such an outcome is by no means guaranteed. Some broker-dealers have argued against this change in the past and may continue to do so. They contend that the more rigorous fiduciary duty would lead to a greater focus on affluent investors—who can afford to pay more for individualized service—and reduce the advice available to average investors.

Regardless of how this controversy is resolved, you should not get caught up in definitions. You can get good advice from broker-dealer representatives and from RIAs; it's also possible to get poor advice or even fraudulent behavior from people in either camp. Choose advisors with care, perhaps after getting recommendations from people you trust. Pay attention to what an advisor is doing with your money and how much he's charging you. Change advisors if you become unhappy—and be especially skeptical of anyone who makes promises that sound too good to be true. ■

The Return of Estate Tax Planning

After a one-year repeal in 2010, the federal estate tax is scheduled to return for deaths occurring in 2011 and later years. If you expect to leave a sizable estate, you probably will want to plan for this tax. Otherwise, your beneficiaries might owe hundreds of thousands, or even millions, of dollars in estate tax. (See the November 2010 CPA Client Bulletin for suggestions about year-end estate tax planning in these uncertain times.)

Net worth

At your death, your executor will be responsible for tallying all of your assets and, thus, determining the size of your estate. Those assets could include your home, other real estate, stocks and other securities, bank accounts, retirement accounts, artworks, and so on. From this so-called "gross estate," your executor will subtract outstanding debts and various final expenses (funeral costs, medical bills) to get a net value of your assets.

Although the future of estate tax legislation is uncertain, you probably can assume certain tax benefits will remain in place. Bequests to charity can be deducted from your estate for tax purposes. The same is true for any amount of assets left to a surviving spouse who is a U.S. citizen.

Example 1: Len Jordan dies with $6 million of net assets. In his will, Len leaves $1 million to various charities. He leaves the rest of his estate, totaling $5 million in assets, to his wife, Pam. Therefore, Len has no taxable estate, and no estate tax is due.

Estate tax exemption

In addition to charitable and spousal estate tax breaks, you can assume that another exemption from federal estate tax will exist. The amount of this additional exemption in 2011 is unknown, as of this writing. Estimates generally range from $1 million to $5 million. Under current law, unless Congress acts by year-end 2010, the federal estate tax exemption in 2011 will be $1 million. (That estate tax exemption is reduced by the amount of any lifetime gifts that use the gift tax exemption, now set at $1 million.) Estate assets from $1 million to $1.25 million will be taxed at 41%; the tax rate increases to 43% for assets from $1.25 million to $1.5 million, 45% for assets between $1.5 million and $2 million, and so on until amounts over $3 million are taxed at 55%. (A 5% surtax will apply to certain amounts over $10 million.)

in 2011 with an estate of $6 million and leaves $2 million to charity. The other $4 million, which is subject to estate tax, is left to their son Greg.

Assume that current law remains in effect, with a $1 million estate tax exemption scheduled for 2011 and tax rates starting at 41%. Also assume that Pam did not use any of her lifetime gift tax exemption. The first $1 million of Greg's inheritance will not be taxed because of the estate tax exemption. Pam's estate will owe estate tax on the remaining $3 million at rates ranging from 41% to 55%. Altogether, Pam's estate will owe $1,495,000 in federal estate tax. Instead of inheriting $4 million, Greg will inherit $2,505,000. (Greg may inherit even less, if state estate tax also is due.)

In these examples, Len "wasted" his federal estate tax exemption by leaving everything to Pam at his death. Consequently, Pam died with a large estate that was heavily taxed.

Example 3: With some estate tax planning, Len might have left $1 million to their son Greg and $1 million less to his widow, Pam. With a $1 million exemption, no estate tax would have been due at Len's death. Then Pam would have died with a $3 million taxable estate, not $4 million. This simple step could have saved $550,000 in federal estate tax, which would have gone to Greg instead of going to the IRS; Pam would have had an estate smaller by $1 million at her death, and her estate would have avoided paying 55% tax on that last $1 million.

Trust tactics

The previous examples are simplified to explain some estate tax concepts.

When planning for estate tax, many professionals suggest that clients use trusts. Properly structured trusts can help reduce future estate tax and provide trust beneficiaries with creditor protection and safeguards against wealth depletion. ■
